Sir,

My husband, Daniel Devoe, and I own property in Borrego Springs. We frequently go to and from San Diego and enjoy the pristine beauty which changes beautifully each season.

It would be a crime to put those UGLY power towers through the valley and the Anza Borrego Desert State Park. I suggest that we do not need the additional power in San Diego. I suggest that SDGE has consistently made decisions not for the end user benefit but for the stockholder benefit. I suggest that the power which would be transmitted would not be "clean" power.

If a power line must be built, put it at the border, parallel to the existing power line. To the "potential fire hazard" argument, I have heard that SDGE power lines are responsible for many of the back country fires which are started because SDGE will not put the proper separators between the lines. When the wind blows, the lines touch and fires are started. Spend the money to bury the additional border power line.

I am against the Sunrise Powerlink project.

Best regards,
Violet Devoe
